

Bodrul Amin

NEC Elections-CLP Section

We have seen the harmful effects of factionalism within our party. That's why I'm standing as an independent allied to no faction within our party. It's vital that we have an independent voice who will hold the leadership to account and be able to provide honest and constructive feedback as to how we can move forward and win as a party. I campaigned for Keir Starmer for leader of our party and I hope to offer a new and fresh voice.

As a trade union activist, officer and trade union employment lawyer, I have spent my working life fighting for rights at work.

As an NEC representative, I will fight for:

-The issues facing BAME and young voters that need to be addressed and to create a more equal society.

-Human rights abuses around the world that need be tackled and to be a voice for the voiceless.

There are millions of people who face financial difficulties and an uncertain future. We need to be a powerful and united voice for these people.

We have seen the transformative power of a Labour government. No more factions or divisions. Let us unite and put Labour back in power.

<https://www.facebook.com/bodrul4nec>